What does gmfu mean in text

By John Mack Freeman The text image of EwegiaMestro's text from Fotolia.com Full-Text refers to the online magazines that reproduce the entire content of online articles in a searchable format. The complete text can have some restrictions depending on the publisher and the database within which the file is found. The complete text is defined in the context of online resources from the Duke University library as a resource that has the whole text available online for reading and research instead of only a quote or abstract. The complete text can be applied to a single article, a periodic whole or a periodical database accessible to the Internet. Full-text files include all the original data provided in the original periodic lines with more than page notes, images and bibliographic information. Depending on the restrictions on certain source materials, the complete text may not be available for all materials online at the same time. "Active integer" means that a magazine has a complete text through the current date, "complete text" usually refers to the complete text of an article supplied to a given date. The "embargoed" files only allow the full text after a given date set by the publisher. Image: Manuel Breva Colmeiro / Moment / Gettyimages Today is common to see initialism such as BFF, ICYMI, CU, TBH and others on Facebook, Twitter and text messaging. Although not everyone is 100 percent safe, what are the specific abbreviations, most are common enough that if you see the abbreviation once, you will see it again in another forum. The abbreviations we use in SMS and on the Internet are not as new as they may seem. Some like ASAP and FYI have the Internet within decades. Others were created during the first days of the Internet. Many of these abbreviations have been created before the Internet has become mainstream or as it was gaining popularity. In 1989, the World Wide Web was officially launched. However, there were already people who connect to the first versions in the 1980s. At that time, people communicated through Usenet. Years have passed since Usenet was the main way that people communicate on the internet, however his legacy lives. The terms and abbreviations created on those message boards remain in the common use. If you've ever been on the internet, you met a FAQ, a flame war, or received a piece of spam. You also witnessed people who talk about things that will happen IRL. "Do you pass a significant amount of time on the Internet? Do you familiarize with your lingo? You could see the expression "PMSL" on a humorous post in an online international discussion forum, and makes you stop and amazes. What exactly does PMSL mean?  ,  ,  ,  , PMSL stands for: p  Sed myself laughing LifeWire / Derek Abella someone who types of PMSL has found something incredibly funny. Other expressions that express laughing and humor include RoflMao ("Rolling on the floor, laughing mine to  off") and lol ("laughing aloud"). Like most of the Internet jargon, the expression is not suitable for most business relationships. PMSL is better used in SMS Personal, e-mail, online chats or in particular circumstances in which a business knowledge has become a friend. Both Uppercase and lowercase versions of PMSL (PMSL) mean the same thing and are perfectly acceptable. When writing or communicating online, be careful not to type entire phrases in uppercase, since this transmits shouting and considered rude. (User 1) OMG! Guys you just made me spit on my whole keyboard and monitor! (User 2) ROFL @ Jim! Bwahahahaha! (User 3) PMSL! Never drink anything when Greg is telling stories about camping trips!  , (user 1) Haha! I have a good one. ROFL! (User 2) What? (User 1) Have you heard of the new ribbed velvet pillows? They are doing titles everywhere! (User 2) PMSL! Bwahaha PMSL is of British origin. There are cases of the PMSL acronym used online since 2000. The PMSL expression has acquired popularity with the European football fans sites as the players tell the incidents committing in their football matches, or when the opposing team would have suffered a kind of Defeat of indignation or fun. The expression pmsl   , like many other online expressions and web lingo, is part of the online conversation culture and is a way to build cultural identity through the playful language and conversation. ROFL (rolling on the laughing floor) RoflmaOA   (rolling on the floor laughing at  off) roflopter (rolling on the laughing floor, turning like a helicopter) lulz    (laughing aloud) lol (laughing aloud) LMAO (laughing at  off) Lulz (laughing the noisy variant) Bwahaha (chat laughter) Mwahaha (imitating vigorous laughter) Generally, you could use PMSL if you think your readers are mainly British and you would use ROFL or some other variant For American readers. Capitalization is a not concern, when using text abbreviations and Chat Jargon. Use all uppercase letters (PMSL) or all lowercase letters (pmsl) and meaning is identical. The adequate punctuation is similar to a not concern with most text message abbreviations. For example, the acronym for "too long, has not read" can be "dries, or TLDR. Both are acceptable. Never use periods (points) among your acronym letters; will defeat the purpose of being a shortcut. , For example,     rofl    would never have been written "rofl, and the tlyl    (" talk to you later ") would never have been tlyl    when attempted to use jargon in messages, evaluate who is your audience, if The context is informal or professional, and then use a good judgment. If you know someone well and is a personal and informal communication, then it absolutely uses abbreviations. On the mobile sheets, if you are just starting a friendship or a professional relationship, avoid abbreviations until you have developed a report report. If messaging in a professional context with someone at Or with a customer or a seller outside your company, avoid abbreviations. The spelling of the complete words shows professionalism and courtesy. It is much more intelligent to make mistakes on the side of being too professional, and then relax your communication over time organically. Organically. Organically.
