So now it entered our argument, there are two types of commonly used agitators,  $\hat{A} \hat{e} 1$ . The propeller agitators are popular for simple mixing work. These push and rotate the liquid into a laminar flow. Once this mixture is "mixed", it may require agitation to keep the mixture in the correct "mixed" state. The introduction or discovery of the types of agitators in the pharmaceutical field is certainly a revolution because several agitators will have different purposes and different advantages, but the most commonly used agitators are anchored, propeller, turbine, pay, for example the round anchoring And the still combined with gate are two types of anchorage.
