The great store behind the movie download is convenience. You don't have to enter a car, stand in line or spend several days waiting while your DVDs travel back and forth between your home and a shipping center. But choosing a service that does not meet your needs can make the process pale compared to other methods of purchase and rental. The first thing to keep in mind is the platform that the site requires. Most movie sites require Windows XP. Some will also work with Windows Vista or Windows Vist Although you can view most of the Firefox sites, the MOVIELINK site will only work with Internet Explorer with the enabled ActiveX control. Amazon Unbox requires Microsoft.net Framework and Vongo requires a proprietary application. For many users, the next Big Deal-Breaker is the site selection. Download sites have their films from film studios, which own digital rights to movies. A site cannot offer the film without first negotiating an agreement with a lot of important studies, so they have a wide selection of free independent films and releases in the studio that you can rent for a fee. VONGO is the property of Starz Entertainment, and its selection reflects only what Starz has the right to transmit. When you find a site with a selection of movies you like, the next thing to watch is the quality of movies. There are a couple of measurements to keep in mind. One is resolution, which is measured in pixels. The greater the resolution, the better the image quality. For example, movies in the Wal-Mart video download archive have a resolution of 640 x 480 pixels, which is the same as the lowest standard television resolution of 320 x 240 pixels. You can also measure the bitrate quality, often measured in bits per second (BPS). The greater the bitrate, the better the quality bitrate - DVD is about 5 kilobits per second (Kbps) or 5000 bps. The codec, or the program that encodes digital video, can also significantly affect the quality of the video. However, sites are not always specified which codecs they use. Finally, before buying or renting movies online, you must carefully read the terms of use of the site and familiarize yourself with its DRM. Some sites are relatively flexible. You can play movies on multiple machines, download them on portable media players and even burn them on DVD. Other sites offer much less options - for example, Amazon Unbox received criticism shortly after the launch for the perceived flexibility of its terms of use. Several sites allow you to make a backup disk that will only reproduce on the computer originally used to download the file. For sites using streaming media, you never really have a copy of the movie, just look at it as a stream ...Sonce you found a site that meets your criteria for the platform, selection, quality and conditions of use, some simple questions Can help you make your final choice: How much does the movies cost? Are they almost expensive as DVDs? If so, would you prefer to find a cheaper alternative or stick with higher quality DVD? Rental and purchase options match what you are looking for? If the site offers a subscription program, does it have enough movies Interested in making it useful? Movies are compatible with Microsoft PlaysForSure, but others have more limited compatibility. Does the site use a file format you have had good or bad experiences with in the past? Do you need a download manager or player download? If it's so, so, Do you mind downloading and learning to use them or would you prefer to use programs with which you are already familiar? The player has all the features you want - can you pause, go back and quickly? To see a comparison between some site offers, take a look at these articles from TechCrunch and Extremetech. Next, we will take a look at the movie Download Services that are now available.
